"Never A Step Backward"

Horace

As 1966 drew steadily nearer to 1967 Canadians should have indeed found a cause for celebration in the Centennial Year. From each province and country throughout the world, people travel to "Expo" where Canada is displaying her achievements, discoveries and progress. Ontario itself can be credited with increased growth and developments over the last century. Its various projects composed for this commemorable year are illustrated in the city of Sarnia.

SCITS underwent a considerable change in the interest of modernism. Although feelings may be mixed about the "new" front, there is increased space and facilities. One of the finest auditoriums is ours to make full use of.

Since a yearbook as complete as our "Ad Astra" is the final effort of many individuals working as a team, everyone deserves credit and thanks. Firstly, to Bonnie Zinkie and the layout staff for their plans, efforts, and dedication. Next, to the other co-editors and outstanding individuals for their time and co-operation. Thanks goes to Mr. Arthurs, our staff advisor, for putting up with many differences and a female dominated staff.

Being the fifty-second editor was indeed a privilege and great honour and I hope as you evaluate your "Ad Astra '67", you will keep in mind that approximately 1,542 hours of work were needed to produce it.

OF ALL THE NATURAL RESOURCES OF A NATION OR COMMUNITY, THE GREATEST IS ITS PEOPLE

This Centennial Edition, our fifty-second publication, is dedicated to people -- to all the people who have ever appeared on the pages of our yearbooks, whether teacher or student, secretary or custodian; to people around us who have made our school, our community, our nation what it is; to people outside our 'Chemical Valley' who have influenced us however much; and to people just because they are people.

We dedicate this book to those who have 'gone on in their new-found merit' and to those who are presently seeking their place in society. We dedicate this book to those who have helped these people find themselves and are presently helping others.

We dedicate this book to our city, provincial, and national administrations who have provided the means of attaining our places in society and our 'new-found merit'.

Finally, we who read this, should dedicate and pledge ourselves towards self-betterment, school pride, community pride, national pride, in this, our Centennial Year, 1967.

"MACTE NOVA VIRTUTE, PUER, SIC ITUR AD ASTRA"

Canada's Centennial

Are you proud of your church, your country, your community, your school?

Many citizens of Canada and many Canadian students have adopted a negative philosophy concerning their government, school, church, etc.

Canadians should be positive people. Canada is a big land; it is the world's second largest country. Only the two prairie provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan do not border on salt water. Providence has blessed Canada with the world's greatest resources in fresh water, forests, minerals, and fertile agricultural lands.

In addition, Canadians should be proud of their culture, their freedom to worship as they please, their unlimited opportunities for advancement in education, and freedom to choose a particular vocation for a life's career.

This is why we must all sing our National Anthem with pride and joy. This is why we must all develop the talents God has given us to the very best of our ability.

In this Centennial Year may I thank the Ad Astra Staff at S.C.I. & T.S. for another fine magazine.

Valedictory Address

Glenna Beauchamp

By definition, a valedictory address is a farewell. A farewell to what--obviously to our high school careers and the people whom we were associated with while here, and in many cases to our families. But this particular farewell is more than this for inevitably it involves a change; a change which, for the most of us, will be one of the greatest of our lives. For whether we continue our academic careers or begin immediately our chosen vocations, we say "good-bye" to one way of life and one mode of thinking and greet the new freedom and responsibility of adults. Along with this should develop a different approach to all the "good-byes" or changes which we will encounter throughout our lives, for, during most of our lives we merely accepted the many changes thrust at us. We had no choice. There was undoubtedly not much concern on our part how we would meet the changes brought by our entry into kindergarten or grade nine. There were all kinds of adults around to see to it that we did. When anything went wrong they were partly, if not wholly, to blame since it was entirely their idea. Now, however, we ourselves are expected to act or react to the changes confronting us and to accept the consequences which now become more permanent. Most of us, I think, do not find this adjustment an easy one. Some fail to make it. The failure rate for the first year of most institutions of higher learning is greater than that of any this year despite the fact that the work becomes more difficult. The problem, we are repeatedly told, is not academic -- it is that of adjustment. How, then, do we cope with changes present or future? Have we derived anything from high school that can help us? I feel that there are experiences which it may be helpful to recollect, not nostalgically but rather with the idea that we can, in many cases, apply our past experience to present situations. For, after all, is this not one basic ability which educators should develop? Now, it may not seem that four or five years of high school have given us a vast store of experience. Nevertheless, I feel that there are at least two memories which can prove of great value to us all our lives.

One instance, which probably seems ironic, is the disappointing experiences of secondary school. I think that for most of us, high school now seems much further away than the six months we've been away from it. And looking back we probably smile or even laugh at some of the incidents which we felt were ultimate catastrophes. Like the time we failed to make an athletic team or be elected to a certain office. Or the time when we thought it was impossible for us to understand a particular subject or concept and the teacher seemed so unsympathetic. There were probably even times when we felt we would never graduate. When our parents tried to reassure us we dismissed them as relics of the past who couldn't possibly see the situation clearly. They may have said they went through the same thing, but our problem was somehow unique. Yet we did survive. From these experiences I feel we can derive two facts worth remembering. First, that we may tend to exaggerate the magnitude of our problems to the point where we distort them way out of proportion. When we are confronted with a situation which seems hopeless and we feel like giving up, we might remember the other time we felt this way and how much less important the problem later proved to be. Secondly, it has probably become obvious to us by now that while our own experience is very limited, there is open to us a great store from other sources: from great people of the past, great people of the present, and our own parents whose worth we probably appreciate much more now that we must break away from them.

Another experience of our secondary education, which for myself and I'm sure for many of us was the most valuable and rewarding, was our contacts with certain members of the staff and administration. While there has been a lot of criticism levelled at the Ontario system of education, some of which is undoubtedly just, there are certain individuals within this system who more than compensate for its imperfections--people who do more than get students through, find exams or look after the business end of education; who because of their example, their encouragement, and unfailing belief in us, bring out the best in us. When we feel drained of all self-confidence, the fact that we know of someone who believed in us enough to invest a lot of time and effort, may inspire in us that belief in ourselves which is so necessary for a successful life.

Finally, in a world in which more progress has been made in the last century than in the history of the world up to then, we will inevitably encounter situations for which there is no precedent. The experiences of our predecessors cannot advise us how to deal with the tremendous power we have learned to release from the atom. Nor can we learn from their example what to do about the alarming increase in population. In such time of continued and extraordinary changes in which we cannot rely on the past, we need something present and constant to sustain us. Now, of course, our ideas along this line are also undergoing a marked change. And this is as it should be. However, while it is good to "put away childish things," it is vital that we replace them with something that can carry us through the most severe crisis or the most drastic change.

ORGANIZATIONS

Clubs Editorial

As a new school year began at SCITS, the beginning of a new, yet old club added to the diversity of SCITS social activities. The Glee Club, under the direction of Mr. G. Turner, has provided entertainment in many of our assemblies, besides throwing a new light on one of the finer arts.

It is in such clubs that we see how important the staff advisor is. In the Math, Science and Electronics clubs, the advisor helps the members of the club with their various projects.

In an organization such as the Students' Council, the staff advisor is a great help in showing the members the basic principles of Club organization. Few of us realize that the staff advisor is not someone present at the meetings because each club must have an advisor, but someone devoting much time and energy for the benefit of the club. On behalf of all school clubs, I would like to thank the staff advisors for everything they have done in helping the various executives and individual members make the club a success.

Awards Committee

This is the committee that records the accumulated points for each person in the different fields of academics and extra-curricular activities such as sports and clubs.

Sixty-five points must be attained for a Second Letter; one hundred points for a First Letter, and one hundred and forty for the Honour Bar.

A minimum of ten points in each field must be held. Even if enough points are held the award is not automatic. The final decision of presenting the awards is left to the committee

Students' Council

This year's Students' Council was probably the most active group in the history of the school. Since September, various committees have been planning and organizing multitudes of projects from the fabulous football parade (complete with Dixieland Band) to the spectacular Spring Formal in April. Class representatives worked hard and managed to have great memorable dances.

This year's Council even managed to make money selling Football Pins and having good dances so, with this new-found luxury, they decided to buy new speakers for the gyms and start a Student Aid Fund. Again this year, the Council sponsored the annual Chocolate Bar Drive and the sale of School pictures.

As this is Centennial Year, the Council decided to get into the spirit and bought a Centennial flag for the school. A Centennial Committee was formed and next year's Council will use its ideas. The Spring Formal was the highlight of the year with the theme 'Moonlight and Roses'.

All in all, it was a very successful year.

Debbie Williams (Secretary)

Lettermen's Club

To obtain membership in this organization, a student must have received his senior letter. This year about ten regular members helped raise funds and boost school spirit through Fudge Sales, a skit in assembly, selling football rosters, and running a Lost and Found. They also organized a banquet and print a tri-annual newsletter for all senior letter winners.

Bowling Club

The Bowling Club this year was composed of a small but enthusiastic group. The Executive consisted of Art Payne (President), Wendy Titus (Vice President), Vera Payne (Secretary), Sharon Landon (Treasurer). The club was a good one, but would have liked a few more regular bowlers.

Vera and Art Payne keep score

Camera Club

Chess Club

The Chess Club, under the expert guidance of Mr. Bell, meets every Monday and Wednesday at noon. Each member competes in a club tournament which fore-runs an inter-school competition for the Saunder's Trophy, in which SCITS placed first last year! This year's executive consists of Peter Catton - President and Dave Hansen - Secretary-Treasurer.

Electronics Club

This year, the Electronics Club saw much activity under the skilled supervision of Mr. Thomas. Meetings have been held in Room 118 on Thursdays. Members have been instructed on the use and handling of Citizen's Band transceivers, television cameras, tape-recording equipment, radio broadcasting, and kit-building. We would like to see more new members, especially girls in the years to come. Girls enjoy kit-building as much as anyone. The secretary is building a super-heterodyne radio receiver.

French Club

This year the French Club carried on with the idea of presenting a book to the student with the highest standing in Grade 13 French mark. The old tradition of a "French-Fry Sale" was also kept this year.

The French Club meets every second Thursday under the leadership of Miss Meloche.

Glee Club

The newly formed Glee Club provides entertainment with the sound of thirty voices.

Johnson (Guest Speaker), Doug Batchelar (Director), Joel Atkinson (Director). ABSENT: Don Burnard (District Governor, O.Q.M.).

Key Club

The 1966-67 Executive led the club to financial success and with its motto "We Serve" the club worked both for the school and for the community.

Fund raising projects included a car wash, coat-checks, an annual dance, and the sale of school pennants. Service included its spirited Key Club Cuties, the Key Club Sweetheart, and the sponsoring of its hockey team, the Golden Keys.

The highlight of the year was the presentation of the school crest at a special assembly.

Library Club

The Library Club meets Tuesdays at noon, under the supervision of Mrs. Fudge. Members learn how to repair and process books, take care of overdue books, and make displays.

A new scrapbook was begun this year in which the news clippings were placed. It was skilfully maintained by Jennifer Davis. The Sarnia Gazette reporter is Cheryl Sands and Cynthia Dayman reports for the Sarnia Observer. SCITS had several live radio shows this year, with Janice Callum reporting for radio station CHOK.

The senior team consists of Paul Peterson (captain), Dave Laur, Pete Richardson, Bill Kingston, Greg Cowley, Ron Walters, John Kaifes and Leon Jacobowsky. The Junior team consists of seven boys from grades nine and ten. In provincial competitions the teams have done quite well, placing high in the shoots.

BACK ROW: Mr. Hamilton, John Dawson (President).
FRONT ROW: Beth Ross (Secretary), Debbie Raby (Vice president).

Science Club

This year at the Science Club films were shown and twenty-minute seminars were delivered by the members. There was an excellent showing at the Science Fair with all who entered from the club receiving awards. They were John Dawson, Wayne and Larry Munday and Jim Townsend. A trip to Western was also included in this years activities.

Spades Club

The new '66-'67 Spades organization guided by their enthusiastic and responsible president, Brenda Swift, and their advisor, Miss Mitchell, has been a complete success. Thanks to the spontaneous support of the Junior School since September, the membership has doubled.

In order to learn more about crippled children, the club took a tour of the Physio-Therapy Department at the Sarnia General. During the Christmas vacation, volunteer service was given to the T.B. Association where the girls filled, headed, sealed, and mailed envelopes.

Prior to Easter, hot 'hot-cross buns' were sold to the students, with all proceeds being sent to the crippled children of Sarnia.

In successfully fulfilling their aim of serving the handicapped, this has been the best year yet for the Spades at SCITS.

Swim Club

This club was formed this year under the guidance of Mr. Rome. Three instructors: Glenn Grabove, John Therriault, and Bob Archer, instruct these boys every Thursday after school in Beginner, Junior, Intermediate, and Senior Red Cross swimming awards. The boys themselves work hard under guidance from their instructors from 3:35 to 5:00 o'clock. After the completion of their awards instruction, some of these boys remain in the pool and train as a competitive swim team.

The club at present, with the exception of the instructors, is mostly made up of junior students. It is hoped that in years to come this club will continue and that the senior students as well as the juniors, will participate.

Musical Notes

The SCITS music department boasts of a senior band of 56 members, an intermediate band of 50 and a junior band of 40 members.

Last year the senior band entered two classes in the May Music Festival placing first in one class and second in the other. There were also 10 members of the band that entered the festival with two of them receiving a mark of 87. The highest mark received that year in the individuals class.

Jim Prudom, one of the soloists that received the 87 mark, further bestowed laurels to our bands' history by being chosen to play trombone with the 103 piece National Youth Orchestra, comprised of members chosen from across Canada. This orchestra toured Europe last summer. While Jim was in Europe, four other band members were at the Ontario Youth Music Camp held at Beaverton Ontario, on the edge of Lake Simcoe. Members of the senior band also performed for the annual SCITS Revue, Commencement, Remembrance Day, Christmas, Easter and the Cadet inspection.

This year the senior and junior bands have performed at morning assemblies, Junior and Senior Commencements, Christmas assembly and the Remembrance Day service. An eight piece dixieland band played for the annual football parade, and a special assembly.

The future holds the following proposed engagements for the senior and junior bands: a concert at Johnson Memorial Public School, the SCITS Revue, the Music Festival, Cadet Inspection, and our own music night some time in April, performed with Mr. Turner's newly formed glee club. An exchange trip with the Orillia High School band is also in the offing.

Accordingly, the eldest of seven children, he was the son of

Without doubt there were visits to Stratford and the

Perhaps even, when he was eleven, young Will was with his parents among the vast throng at Kenilworth to witness the colourful pageant with which the Earl of Leicester weltown was the lovely Warwickshire countryside where Shakespeare must have roamed and acquired much of the amazing store of knowledge of natural life which his plays reveal. There, too, he developed that sensitive appreciation of the English seasons which sprang so spontaneously into his lyrical verse.

THE YOKE OF THE EAGLE

Bowles, the Prince of Peace, ruled the vast country of Towne. He was a kindly leader whose chubbily little frame was topped with red hair. He lived in a large castle which was perched on Parliament Hill. Despite the luxurious surroundings and his many aides, Bowles was not happy.

The man who ruled one hundred years before Bowles had promised the country of Towne a huge birthday party. Bowles loved his country and wanted desperately to provide a party in which all could partake.

Bowles religiously called his ministers when matters of state became too burdensome.

"Nineteen dollars and sixty-seven cents," he said aloud, "how can I give a party for eighteen million people on that small amount?"

One minister who had a sharp wit replied, "I have tried to warn you that your generosity would lead to your present problem. Every time the people of Towne request money for repairs, new buildings and various luxuries, their tales of woe sent your hand dipping into the treasury."

"But I have small hands Honourable minister," pleaded Bowles.

"No matter," cried the ministers. "Your soft heart has created this sad state of affairs. Why only two years ago you gave into the whims of the people and spent an enormous sum to give them a flag adorned with a large red emblem to match your hair. And just because they loved your hair! We have no solution for the problem."

Bowles laid down in the chamber and sobbed. A tall, long-nosed, bald-headed eagle flew in the open window and perched at his right hand.

"Don't y'all cry Bowles" it said, "I bring an endless supply of genuine money to solve your dilemma. You give your people to us and in return you'll have all the gold you need."

"I could not sell my people."

"Bowles, it's your duty to give Towne a birthday party as promised by your previous leader. The promise says nothing about giving to the people."

Defeated and desperate, Bowles accepted the offer.

Meanwhile all the people of Towne were trying to gather funds with which to give the country extra birthday celebrations. The people assembled in twelve meeting places which were linked by communications provided by their beloved leader Bowles.

The speaker for the people said, "How much money have we collected?"

"Eighteen dollars and sixty-seven cents" replied the treasurer.

"Is that all?" moaned the people simultaneously.

"I had hoped we would have more but the people are so heavily taxed that they were unable to contribute further" said the treasurer.

The people cried in unison, "We have failed our country."

Suddenly a tall, long-nosed, bald-headed eagle hovered over the largest assembly.

It drawled, "Behold I bring y'all tidings of great joy. Sell me your Prince of Peace and in return I shall deliver to you the necessary funds."

"No! Never! We could not sell our beloved Bowles."

"Loyalty to your country is foremost. I am sure your Prince of Peace has told you that."

The people, by means of telephone, discussed the offer with the other eleven groups, all of whom agreed to accept the offer.

On the eve of January first, Towne was ready to celebrate its hundredth birthday. It appeared that the Centenary cannons would fire a volley of silence. There were no people and there was no leader, merely a vast land which possessed great wealth.

In the land of the great eagle, Bowles and the people met a new type of minister whose name was Uncle Martin. Tired of their one day in slavery, they chanted, "You 'Can A Da' this to us."

They realized their unwise sacrifices and climbed aboard the underground railroad, escaping to freedom in time to celebrate the hundredth birthday of Towne.

The moral of this fairytale: History repeats itself almost every hundred years, or Never let an eagle perch on your Bowles!

IF ONLY ...

When the cheering stops,
And the crowds are gone,
As shadows lengthen,
And night comes,
I am enveloped
In a complete emptiness.
Life is an eternity
Of lonely frustrations.
I peer down
The long mirrored corridor
Of memory,
And see reflected
In every pane,
Images of myself
As I was,
Or as I hoped to be.
In retrospect,
The disillusioning remembrance
Of unfulfilled hopes,
And unattained goals
Shrouds me in a veil of self-pity.
All the deeds
I could have done,
All the places
I could have gone,
All the words
I could have said
All the things
I could have been
If only ...

BALLAD OF THE ARTIFICIAL PLAINSMAN

The monotony of the prairie rolls on and on,
He lifts o'er the fields his sad, desperate song
Of how he will leave when the summer is gone,
Of how he will go when the crops are in.
His time is running out, his tale almost told,
He came to get rich from the grass which is gold,
He has nothing but memories now that he's old,
The plains have become his prison.
He came with his youth, he will leave with age,
The time he has left is but a few days,
Before his name's written on death's black page,
Before these lowlands become his tomb.
He dreams of returning to the land of his birth,
Where his ancestors' roots are deep in the earth,
Where his last days could hold something of worth,
For the plains were never his home.

THE LOST DOG

I found
A lost dog
Alone in a snowy field.
He was
Tired, cold, and hungry,
And when I approached him
He trembled with fear.
I spoke reassuringly to him
Stroking his body.
I placed my head
Near to his,
And felt a damp tongue
Against my cheek,
And in his eyes
I saw a glow
From deep within.
At that moment
I was omnipotent,
For I,
By a simple act of kindness,
Had created love,
And love is all powerful.

mumbling some inaudible excuse, departed rapidly. Jon looked up and faced George Santor IV.

"I heard what you said," George said calmly. Jon swallowed hard again. Slowly but very precisely, the new one sat down across from Jon and his dark eyes never left Jon's. And Jon's never left the schoolbag. Mentally he tried to compute how long it would take the fellow to unlatch his schoolbag, cock the pistol and fire, if Jon tried to make a break. But he sat, chained by fear, fear of getting plugged in the back at the doorway to Jud's Place.

"I think you're upset because I showed you up in history class," George started. "So you invented this wild hallucination about a pistol to relieve your frustration."

Jon was ready to say something but he checked himself as George stood up. Just before he left George reminded him, "Can the pistol story, Jon."

At the supper table that night Jon had picked both at his food and at the idea that he should get the advice of his parents, but a fellow just doesn't come home from school and say, "Hey Dad, what would you do if you knew that the fellow next to you carried a pistol to school?" His mother would probably have taken his temperature or something, so he had remained silent.

As soon as it was dark, Jon decided to drive over to George's place and have a little talk with "Mr. Fourth." As he was driving the questions whizzed through his mind like telegraph poles speeding past the windows of a train. He pulled up on Elm Street and saw the number 13 on the house in the reflection of the streetlight. There was a light in the front room. George must be home he thought. I might as well talk to the kid and find out what's going on. He got out of the car and crossed the street to the concrete steps leading to the front porch. No, he checked himself, maybe I should just go back home. This is ridiculous. Why should I get involved? He glanced back to the car and then raised his eyes to the three-story Victorian home that rose as high as the maples that guarded it.

He knocked on the door lightly, hoping no one would answer. But George opened the door motioning Jon to come in. "I know why you came here."

"All right Mr. Fourth, if you know all the answers, what happened to that gun?"

George's quick answer caught him off guard. "My .38 is in my room. I brought it with me so I could get a license for it after school."

"Oh," was all Jon could manage.

"George? George? Who's there?" came a voice from the upper floor. "I heard something. Who's there?" The voice was old and antiquely precise.

"It's nothing, Mrs. Vestry," George called. "I'm studying."

"Very well." And the staircase was silent.

"Who was that?" Jon asked.

"My aunt."

"Don't you call her aunt? You know, like Aunt so-and-so?"

"She doesn't believe in our relationship. I live here solely as a boarder."

"Why?" Jon frowned.

"Because the man who married her niece, her only relative, deserted her. My mother then committed suicide."

"That's grim," Jon said weakly.

"And I have my father's blood in me, so...." George sat down. "And my father's name is 873L4."

"What?"

George pulled a folder paper from his wallet and handed it to Jon. "Read it."

Jon read the words aloud: "International cashier's cheque, Banque due Geneva. Pay to George Santor IV exactly One Thousand USA Dollars. Account 873L4." Jon frowned, "What does this mean?"

"I get one of these a month to support me. That number is my father. That's all I know. Where he is, if he is alive--no one will tell me."

Jon stared silently at the check. Then he quickly folded it and thrust it into George's hand. "I'm sorry." It was a weak thing to say but Jon couldn't think of anything dynamically dramatic.

"I'll bet you are. You don't understand; nobody understands. I don't expect you to. Look Jon you have your family, your friends, your school, your whole environment. All I've got is a lousy piece of paper. You're on a happy little merry-go-round, and if you don't reach out too far to snare the brass ring you'll stay on that happy ride until you die."

"You think I have it made, don't you? Well life's no merry-go-round. You're afraid to trust anybody. You're afraid that being a friend means you might have to think of some one else once in a while, rather than just about yourself. You're all wrapped up in yourself and you've become the poor little martyr. You sit there and cry like a little kid: 'Nobody understands me'. Well, fellow you're a two-bit phony. You're the most selfish person I've ever met. You're going to have to crack that little shell of yours and come out and trust somebody. Take care, little kid, I'm leaving. You can be all alone with the only person you love and trust and respect--yourself. Lots of luck."

"I thought you understood but you don't, just like everybody else, but you're worse 'cause you think you're good. You can talk. You have a family, and friends."

"And you don't?"

"No." George shook his head slowly and stared at the floor.

Jon walked over to him. He reached down and jerked George to his feet. "You're a liar."

George stared at him wide-eyed. "A what?"

"I said you're a liar."

"What do you mean?"

"'Cause you have a friend."

"Who?"

"Me!"

Jon walked down the hall until he spotted old 622, his locker. He spun off his combination and was looking for his history book on the top shelf when he noticed someone at locker 623. It was the new fellow.

"Hi," Jon said.

"Hi," came the reply. The new one set down his schoolbag and furtively, as if eyes were waiting to steal the numbers, dialed his combination.

What a weirdo, Jon thought. "My name is Jon, Jon Jordan," he said aloud. The new one was silent. Slowly he crouched and unzipped his schoolbag, emptying the contents into the locker. Jon watched secretively. Three books, a new looseleaf folder, two ballpoint pens and a steel-blue revolver.

For a moment before class started Jon wanted to blurt out that he should explain the revolver he had carefully placed on the shelf of his locker, but he remained silent. Maybe it wasn't a gun. After all, he caught only a split second glimpse of the weapon. But it looked real. It had that uncomfortable glint, the same kind of cool deadliness that coloured the pistols and rifles at Smith's Sporting Goods Store. Anyway, Jon remained silent and mulled the puzzling thoughts in his head as history class dragged the minute hand slowly around the clock.

His history book was open to the right page just in case Mr. Axelson, fondly called "Axehead" by his students, took one of his customary strolls down the aisle. But the words on page 43 were gray, undistinguishable blobs. He tried to concentrate, but it was useless. Each time he focused on the blocks of type, he found his eyes creeping slowly up the page, past the top of the book and rested on the shoulders and head of the young man in the seat ahead. It was the new fellow.

Mr. Axelson droned on about some useless point, slashing the green blackboard with his chalk as if he were the last of the musketeers. Jon Jordan fidgeted in his seat, trying to clear a path through the thoughts that cluttered his mind. He wandered back to the beginning of the period, when the new student shyly entered the senior history class. He had hugged the wall and almost slid through the doorway, like a little kid sneaking into a circus. But Mr. Axelson noticed him, as had the students, and when a hush fell over the classroom, "Axehead" called him to the front of the room. There the new student, in that painful, silly game they play in thousands of schools across the land, gave his name--George Santor IV--his home town and a lot of other irrelevant facts. Then Mr. Axelson assigned him to the vacant desk in front of Jon. They hadn't spoken and Jon made no attempt to communicate with him, especially since their encounter at the lockers when Jon had tried to introduce himself and the new student had ignored him.

"Mr. Jordan? Mr. Jordan can you tell me and the class where the Transcontinental Railroad met and what date?" Jon jumped up in his seat and shook his head.

"Oh, yes, it was--ah," he mumbled stalling for time. Who cares when and where it happened anyway? he said to himself. Of all the stupid questions. "I don't know," Jon stammered.

"I think you weren't paying attention, Mr. Jordan."

"Uhh," Jon mumbled, half in agreement. He was ready to apologize, the standard operating procedure in "Axehead's" class, when the new one raised his hand.

"Mr. Santor," the teacher said, recognizing the hand. George Santor IV proudly announced the correct answer adding a lot of unnecessary detail afterwards.

"All right, all right, Mr. Santor," Mr. Axelson interrupted. "I believe you have answered the question to everyone's satisfaction. Did you hear that answer, Mr. Jordan?"

"Yes sir." Jon stared at the back of George's head. Yeah, I heard, Mr. Fourth.

When the final prison bell rings at 3:30 in the afternoon and the out-of-town students are aboard their rides home, most of the Rufus Springs inmates congregate at Jud's Place, a greasy-spattered hamburger joint on Emerson Street.

Jon and May Jo and a couple of their friends were seated in one of the booths near the door. Jon shifted uncomfortably on the torn green and blue vinyl seat.

"I still say you're just jealous," Mary Jo repeated.

"Jealous of him?" Jon exclaimed. "You've gotta be kidding."

"He did answer the question in history class." She took a long sip of her soda and smiled.

"You're out of your tree, May Jo. He didn't answer the question; he started teaching the course. And what about that revolver?"

"You were just seeing things."

"I swear it was a gun and a real one."

Mary Jo sipped her drink again. "Did he shoot anyone today?" she asked dryly.

"Oh, really!" Jon snapped. "I did see it."

"Jon," Mary Jo interrupted.

"I did see the gun. He took it out of that wild schoolbag of his and set it in his locker."

"Jon!"

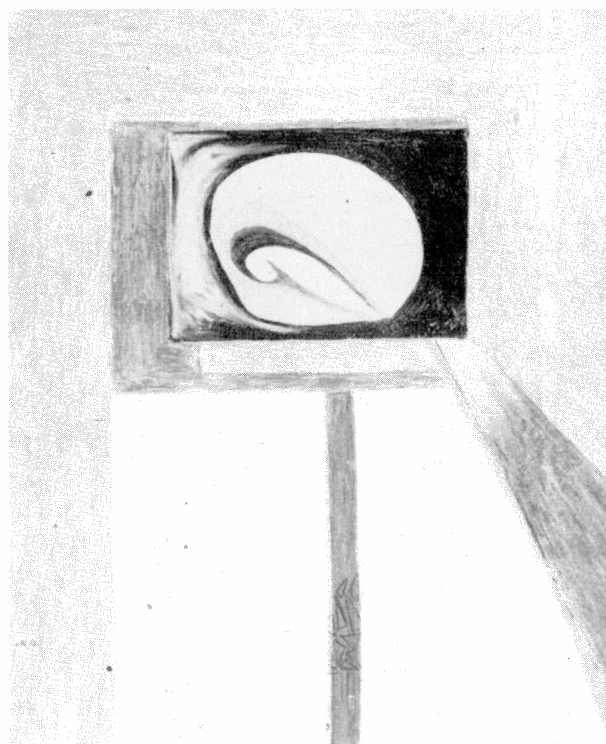

"It was a revolver. One of those little ones, like the crooks carry in the movies. I tell you he had a gun."

"Jon!"

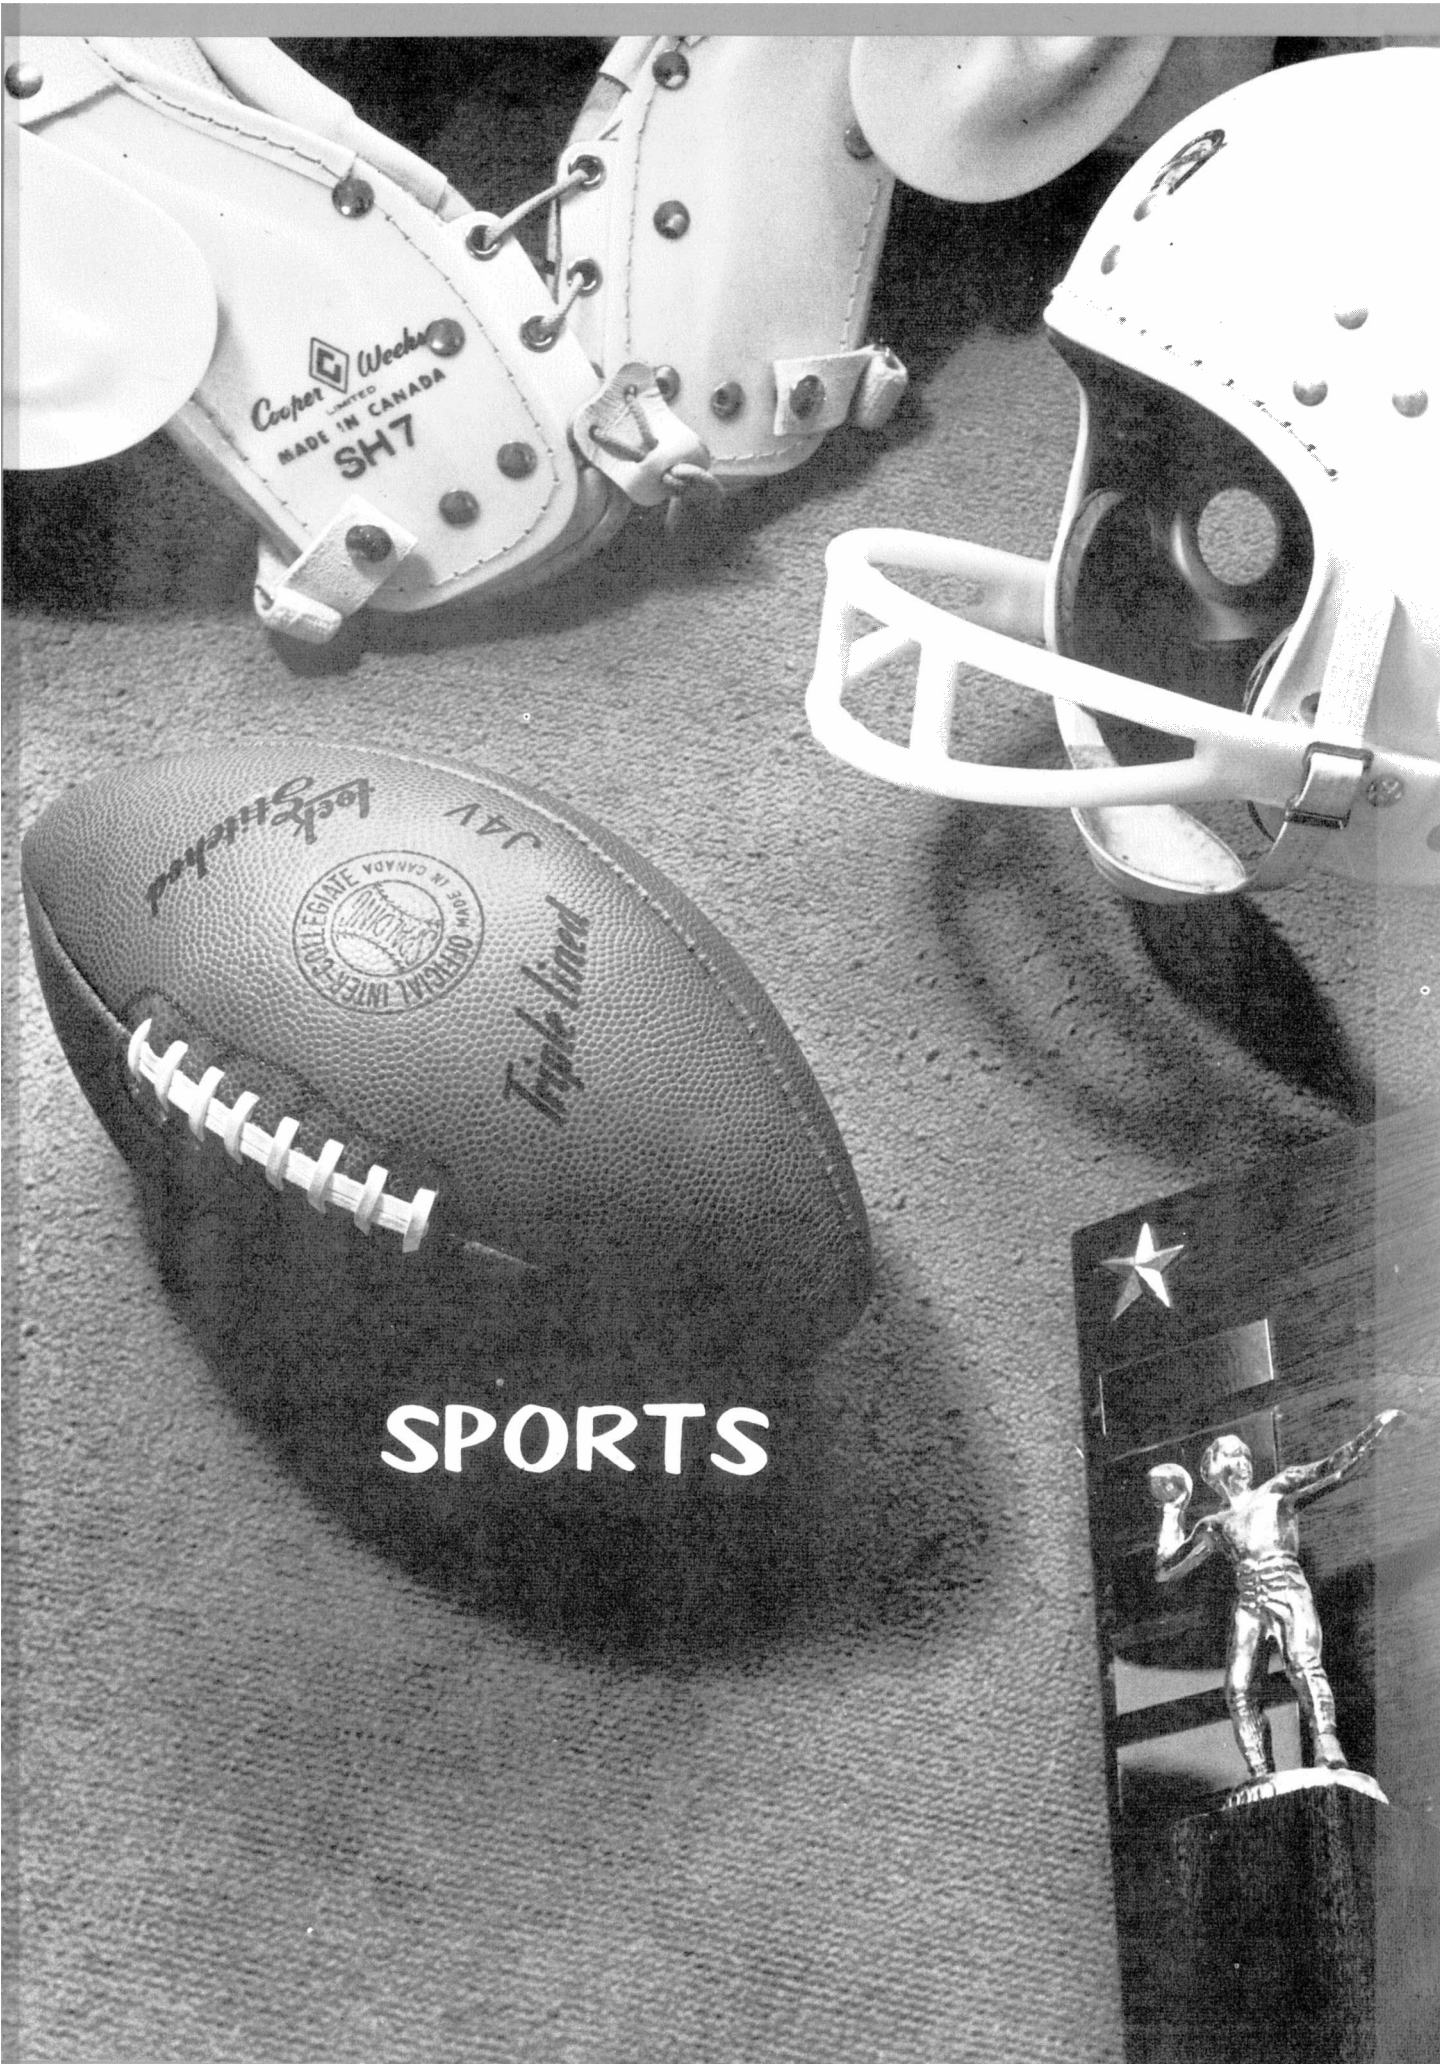

"I hear you! I hear you! For Pete's sake, what do you want?" Mary Jo nodded meekly to the aisle. Jon looked. There taking in every word, stood the new student, his schoolbag primly at his side.

Like actors searching for dialogue the occupants of the first booth at Jud's Place froze in position and silently stared at the diminutive figure in the aisle. Jon Jordan swallowed painfully. Mary Jo and the others

Girls' Volleyball

SENIOR

The two-day Senior Volleyball Inter-School tournament was hosted by Central with SCITS convening the event. St. Pat's came through brilliantly winning every match to capture the Senior Trophy.

Linda McDonald led our team very ably and our girls lost to St. Pats by a very slim margin (11-7).

An excellent spirit of competition and sportsmanship was evident throughout the tournament by all teams. Our team received the compliment that it was the best team in the league accepting the referee's decisions without complaint or comment. In other words, SCITS Seniors are 'Sportsmanship Champions'.

SENIOR INTER-FORM

The champs were 12A led by Carol Coolege. Other members were: Cynthia Dayman, Karen McLaughlin, Trudy Soyko, Evelyn Hargin, Gabrielle Tius, and Marg Beer.

JUNIOR

The SSSAA Girls' division completed its Junior Volleyball Inter-school tournament. St. Clair was host for the two-day tourney and SCITS convened.

The playing was superb as witnessed by the fact that at the end of the tournament there was a three-way tie for first place: St. Clair, Northern and Central.

St. Clair defeated Northern 15-7, then downed Central 15-2, capturing the Junior Trophy.

Did you hear about the paper doll that committed suicide when she found out that her mother was an old bag.

She: I see you've broken your tooth. How did you do it?

He: Shifting gears on a lollipop.

He: Why has your grandmother been reading the Bible so much?

She: I think she's cramming for the finals!

Teacher: A fool can ask more questions than a wise man can answer.

Student: No wonder so many of us flunk our exams.

Teacher: If I saw a man beating a donkey and I stopped him, what virtue would I be showing?

Voice from the back of the room: Brotherly love!

The man in the headshrinker's office said, "I'd like to find out what makes me tick – and also what makes me chime the hour and the quarter hour too."

CENTENNIAL IN SECONDARY EDUCATION

One hundred years ago, at the rear and to the north of the little red school house then situated on the site of the present Kenwick Terrace, Sarnia's first Grammar School was built — a one-room frame building. In 1859 a four-room school was built on the site of the present General Hospital. In 1890 the old Collegiate Institute was built on London Road. In 1922 the present building was completed. It seems that every 31 years Sarnia builds a new secondary school, so we have great hopes for additional accomodation in 1953.

This year our present student body is occupying not only the Wellington Street School Annex but additional rooms in the S.C.I. & T.S. which were not meant to be used as classrooms. It is remarkable how both staff and students alike have adjusted themselves to our cramped quarters with their necessary inconveniences and hardships. We all, apparently, realize that it is not brick and mortar that make a school but the quality of its members and the spirit and industry of its personnel! Last year the school had the best record during the six years I have been here. There were fewer lates, less truancy, better attendance and better academic results in all grades. Our Upper School was 92% successful, our Middle School 87%, and 28% of our grade nine students received first class honours. The credit for this record can be shared by our painstaking staff and serious-minded students and our Board of Education, who give generously of their time and experience in the interest of the young people in our school. I hope next year we can boast of an equally good or even better performance in spite of prospective staggered classes.

WAR!!

THE world today is in a state of unrest. It can be compared to a barrel of gun-powder, with only the tiniest spark needed to set it off. Newspapers throughout the country carry story after story of the merciless slaughter being carried on in Spain; articles are written on new discoveries which can be used as instruments of warfare; nations spend billions on rearmament; aeroplane factories work twenty-four hours a day turning out fighting craft. Everywhere, from the high-ranking official to the poorest labourer, the common topic is war.

Has man gone insane? Are we going to forget the awful slaughter of the Great War, the gaps in population which take generations to fill? Are we going to sacrifice the youth of the nation again, to satisfy the ego of some foreign dictator? The latter question has been brought to the foreground again and again, yet we go blindly on, heading straight towards the abyss, from which the only safe retreat lies through a curtain of shells, liquid fire, bombs and tanks devised by man for the annihilation of his fellow men.

From statistics, printed years after the last war, the one which was to end all wars, one would think that the human race would never again take part in such an orgy. Yet the passing of time heals even the sorest wounds.

This seems to be the case today. The generation growing up, know little of the last horrible disaster, since they were too young to understand what was going on. They have been taught the history of the last war in school and at the same time an effort was made, to fix in their minds the full significance of the word war. But this was history, something to be memorized and written for examinations, with the result that the story was forgotten once the examination was written.

Europe today is made up of a number of nations, each ready to cut each other's throat should the opportunity present itself. They act like angry dogs, straining at the leash which is becoming weaker all the time. Some day this restraining link will burst asunder and topple the whole world into another war, the like of which has never been seen before. The
